Creators

Russell T. Davies , b. 1963 (Producer)

Russell T. Davies is a British "showrunner", television writer and creator of the new Doctor Who in 2005 (revived on the BBC after a hiatus of sixteen years), The Sarah Jane Adventures (Doctor Who spin off series aimed at children) and Torchwood (Doctor Who spin off series aimed at adults).

Davies was born in Swansea, Wales in 1963. In interviews he describes how his parents were classics teachers and he grew up "in a house full of books" with "stories of Greek mythology" and Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (see here, accessed: June 3, 2018) and Welsh Economic Review 19.1 (2007): 24–25.

Davies' career in television writing and production started in children's television at the BBC in the late 1980s, before working on adult drama for ITV, including soap opera Coronation Street and period drama The Grand. From the late 1990s he has created a number of series featuring gay characters including Queer As Folk, Bob & Rose, Cucumber and Banana. He was awarded the OBE in 2008 for services to drama.

Summary Part One

The adult protagonist of the series, and previous companion of Doctor Who, the journalist Sarah Jane Smith, is investigating the story that a ghostly nun has been sighted at an old people's home. Accompanied by her adopted son Luke and his friend Clyde, she interviews residents and staff about the sighting. Bea, an elderly resident and Alzheimer sufferer, gives Luke a piece of jewellery she calls a "talisman" and asks him to keep it safe. This is found to be an alien artefact by Sarah Jane's super computer, Mr Smith, and we later learn that this artefact, discovered by Bea's archaeologist husband, can open a portal to another world, inhabited by a race of aliens, known as Gorgons. Nuns are protecting an aging Gorgon, who has taken the Abbess as a human host. Sarah Jane reads the story of Perseus and Medusa from an illustrated book of Greek myths to her young neighbour Maria, explaining that Greek myths have a basis in fact. The text as read by Sarah Jane draws on the story of Medusa from Ovid's Metamorphoses, as "Poseidon fell in love with her and jealous Athena turned her into a Gorgon."

Sarah Jane believes that the Gorgons are aliens. When we later see the Gorgon the snakes upon her head are made of energy rather than actual serpents, which further modernises the image of the monster. On discovering from Clyde that Luke has been kidnapped by the nuns, Sarah Jane drives to the abbey, and gives a false name as she enters, leaving the children in the car. The nuns lock Sarah Jane in a room, and she is reunited with Luke, and with Maria and Clyde, who have also been found by the nuns. Sister Helena explains that the three alien Gorgons have been protected by nuns for centuries and only one remains, and the talisman is the key for her to return to her home planet to die. Sarah Jane agrees to bring back the talisman, leaving Luke and Clyde with the nuns. Sarah Jane returns home, accompanied by the nuns and the veiled Gorgon, and gets out the talisman but threatens to destroy it. The Gorgon's veil is raised by the nuns, and Maria's father Alan is turned to stone.

Part Two

Sister Helena takes the talisman and reveals that this will open a portal between worlds, and so the Gorgons can come to Earth. Back at the abbey Clyde and Luke find a secret passage, and escape to a garden filled with "statues"; victims of the Gorgon. Mr Smith, the computer, reveals that Sarah Jane and Maria have around ninety minutes to save Maria's father before he is permanently turned to stone. Bea reveals that the talisman can be used to save Maria's father, and gives Maria a mirror to use against the Gorgon. Sarah Jane returns to the abbey, where the boys have snatched back the talisman from the nuns, who have started a ritual to open the portal. Sarah Jane is taken prisoner by Sister Helena, and it is revealed that the Gorgon needs a new human host as she is dying, and the host of choice is Sarah Jane. As the Gorgon is unveiled, Maria, having learned from the story of Perseus, points the mirror at the Gorgon's own face. The Gorgon is turned to stone, and the nuns are all released from the spell that made them serve the Gorgon. Sarah Jane and the children return home and use the talisman to return Maria's father to his human state.

Analysis

These two episodes of a children's television series bring the mythological creatures (the Gorgons) into the modern world, explaining that they are actually aliens from another planet. This treatment of Greek mythology is used in a number of episodes of Doctor Who, where Minotaurs are aliens and a Siren is a holographic Doctor, in "The Horns of Nimon" (1979–1980), "The God Complex" (2011) and "The Curse of the Black Spot" (2011). This rationalises the Greek mythic monsters and integrates them into the alien-filled world of Doctor Who.

The episodes do not draw on any ancient sources, and do not require any knowledge of Greek mythology, as the story of Perseus and Medusa is explained within the episodes. However, viewers who already know the story, potentially from a storybook featuring Greek myths similar to the one Sarah Jane uses, are able to benefit from their existing knowledge in being able to enjoy the twists in the plot where the story has been modernised and subverted.

The episodes also encourage viewers that reading stories from Greek mythology can have a practical benefit; so having read about Perseus and Medusa in a book of Greek mythology the young protagonist Maria is able to defeat the Gorgon by using the mirror to deflect the Gorgon's gaze, and save her mentor Sarah Jane Smith. Young viewers and readers can find out more about Perseus and Medusa if they read the tie in novel.
