Additional information

Summary

Hercules narrates his story, beginning with his birth as the mortal son of a god. He talks of how he was a child prodigy in warfare but failed at learning music. After killing the teacher that belittles him about failing at music, Hercules goes out into the world to learn what he can. After Hera challenges Zeus to prove Hercules is worthy of being immortal, Hercules jumps at the opportunity and completes twelve labours.

Analysis

Hercules narrates the story, and the narration is extremely biased and egotistic. He speaks of Hera's jealousy of himself, and how Eurystheus inherited the throne instead of him; he praises his own fearlessness and strength. Hercules says straight out that he does not value modesty and this opinion is noticeable throughout his narration as he boasts about his astounding strength and appears extremely vain at times. In his own eyes, Hercules deserves all the fame and glory he eventually received. The handful of black and white illustrations emphasizes Hercules' strength, and the book is made up of thirteen chapters, roughly one chapter per labour.
