Summary

‘Hell Hath No Fury’ (4.3) is the first Charmed episode to include Greek mythological characters, in this case the Furies, although these Furies are described as ‘modern knockoffs’ of the classical originals. The episode starts after the death of eldest sister Prue, who was killed by a demon at the end of season three, and the discovery of new half-sister Paige, who is half witch, half ‘whitelighter’ (a guardian angel type character who looks after witches). Piper, who has become the eldest sister after Prue’s death, is struggling to accept that Prue is gone and that Paige is her sister. She therefore concentrates on fighting demons, and along with younger sister Phoebe and Phoebe’s fiancé and ex-demon Cole, she finds three female demons dressed in red rags with strange aboriginal-style markings on their faces, claws for fingernails, and breathing smoke, chasing after a man. Cole manages to kill one of the demons by throwing a fireball at her, but not before she has blown smoke into Piper’s mouth. The other two demons disappear.

On returning home Phoebe starts to cough and calls the demons ‘cancer girls’, but Cole advises her that they are Furies. Piper asks if they are ‘like from mythology’ and Phoebe adds ‘the dog-faced women from hell?’ Cole says that they are ‘modern knock-offs’ but ‘their MO is the same’; punishing ‘evil-doers’, but go after any criminal, from a shoplifter to a murderer and ‘take great pleasure in the kill’. These Furies, in their red clothes, and appearing as a trio, and breathing smoke, would seem to be inspired by the Furies from Roman literature, rather than the Furies from Aeschylus’ Oresteia, who are numerous and dressed in black rags. Although they are not named as Megaera, Tisiphone and Alecto, as the three Furies are named in later sources, their smoke echoes the smoking torches carried by Roman Furies, as do their red clothes (see for example the Furies in Virgil’s Aeneid and Ovid's Metamorphoses). Their description as dog-faced women does have its roots in Greek literature, however, as in Euripides' Orestes and Elektra they are described as kunōpides, or dog-faced, a description that does not appear elsewhere.

Like the ancient Furies these modern Furies also have the power to drive an evil-doer mad, by making him/her hear the cries of former victims. When Phoebe retrieves the Book of Shadows, which has been borrowed without permission by Paige, who has used it to remove the spots from a co-workers face, and to torment an office lothario, she finds more information about the Furies. Not only do they victimise evil-doers, they can also make good people into one of their kind by finding 'a portal of unexpressed fury', like the anger Piper is feeling at Prue's death. Sure enough, Piper starts to turn into a Fury. Her fingernails become claws and she joins the two remaining Furies. Piper, now dressed as a Fury, returns to her house with her Fury companions looking for Cole, who, as an ex-demon, is an evil-doer to be punished. To return her to her human self the portal of unexpressed fury must be closed. To do this Leo, Piper's husband and whitelighter, and Paige, take Piper to Prue's grave and Paige tells Piper that it is okay to hate her dead sister for leaving her. Piper eventually breaks down and returns to her former self by submitting to her anger and grief. The day after Piper finally accepts Paige into the family and calls her 'sister' for the first time.

Analysis

Charmed is a long-running fantasy television series featuring three young women who are also witches, known as the Charmed Ones, who fight demons from their home in San Francisco, while trying to maintain some semblance of normal lives, with careers and boyfriends/husbands. The series borrows from many genres and traditions, and includes characters and/or storylines from Greek mythology in a small number of episodes, primarily 'Oh My Goddess' (5.22 and 5.23) 'Muse to My Ears' (4.9), 'Siren Song' (5.4) and 'Little Box of Horrors' (7.18).

'Hell Hath No Fury' presents us with modern versions of the Furies who are slotted into the world of Charmed. These Furies are created drawing on ancient sources (as 'dog-faced women from hell') and are also used in an imaginative way in an episode dealing with the aftermath of the death of a sister. As this episode is primarily about dealing with grief following the murder of a relative the use of the Furies is particularly apt, rather than any other type of demon that could have been chosen as demon of the week. A key function of the Furies in Greek tragedy, including the Oresteia of Aeschylus, is to ensure that familial murders are avenged (and so Orestes is persecuted by the Furies for killing his mother). However in the Eumenides, the final tragedy in the Oresteia trilogy, order is restored without violence, with the help of Athena, as the Erinyes/Furies become the Eumenides/Kindly Ones, protecting Athens. In 'Hell Hath No Fury' order is restored as Piper is encouraged to accept her anger by her sister Paige. In both texts the violence of the Furies is ultimately rejected.
