Script Editor

Geoffrey Orme , 1904 - 1978

Geoffrey Orme (1904-1978) was an English screenwriter for television as well as film. His earliest credits were feature film scripts of the 1930s and '40s – including Sunshine Ahead (1936); Hearts of Humanity (1936); four Old Mother Riley films (1941-3); and Here Comes the Sun (1946) – before turning to the new medium of television in the 1950s. Work on six episodes of the ITV (Independent Television) adventure/drama series Ivanhoe (1958) gave him an entry into writing for family entertainment; and he wrote episodes for other ITV series – Interpol Calling (1959); The Avengers (1963); and No Hiding Place (1965) – before being commissioned to write a four-episode storyline for the BBC's Doctor Who. The Underwater Menace (1967) turned out to be his last major work, and after the feature film The Long Duel (1967), Orme retired; dying in 1978.

Sequels, Prequels and Spin-offs	Robinson, Nigel, Doctor Who – The Underwater Menace , London: Target, 1988.
Summary	‘The Underwater Menace’ was typical of mid-1960s Doctor Who (1963–1989; 2005–present) and its turn away from the strictly historical, and educational, storylines of the early ‘60s, towards purely science-fiction and adventure stories. The story sees the crew of the TARDIS (the time/space machine) materialise on an island inhabited by the survivors of the lost city of Atlantis. The Doctor (an alien ‘Time Lord’ from the Planet Gallifrey) and his companions (Ben, Polly, and Jamie) are threatened immediately by High Priest Lolem, and are to be made human sacrifices to the god Amdo, but are saved just in time by renegade scientist, Professor Zaroff. Zaroff intends to raise Atlantis (actually by draining the seas), and enslaves Ben and Jamie, to assist in his plans; while Polly is to be surgically converted into a Fish Person. Through a series of misadventures (again avoiding sacrifice, murder, and the like), the Doctor and his companions foil the nefarious plans of Professor Zaroff, with the help of the Atlanteans and the Fish People. Atlantis is ultimately doomed, but the Doctor is confident that the survivors will go on to lead profitable lives elsewhere.

Analysis

'The Underwater Menace' is a key example of mid-1960s British television entertainment. Watched by between 7 and 8 million viewers during its four-week broadcast, the serial is a notable example of a science fiction appropriation of Classical myth, in imitation of the B-movies of the same period (e.g. 1963's Jason and the Argonauts). The time travelling theme of the program was a handy device for justifying the incursion into mythical Atlantean history; and the Doctor and his companions serve as useful avatars for the young audience-members as they are introduced to and familiarised with the pseudo-historical and mythical context of the storyline (or, rather, reacquainted with matters with which they were supposed to be familiar; with such themes still being central to British elementary-level schooling in the 1960s).
